State repels immigration; and it falls back on the Governor as the great scare-crow that keeps everybody away. The Governor has said in his messages to the Legislature that in certain portions of the State there has been a refusal to respect and obey the laws, hich the civil authority was insufficient to enforce. And in order that they might be enforced be has invoked the aid of small bodies of the military. The action of his Excellency in this matter has been peculiarly obsioxious to the managers of the rebel democracy ties where these difficulties occurred. the facts referred to the facts themselves be blamed. It is our misfortune that such a condition of things exists, and the responsibility must rest some-where. If any one agency has more of i that responsibility than the Wheeling Register, we dont know what it is. The scrupulous sheet ever since they came back to their homes. If they had bee let alone they would have quietly accepted the situation and have become law-abiding citizens, but they were taught by that rebellions sheet, day by day and from week to week, that the illegal and usurping body, that the ernment of the State was a corrupt and expensive tyranny, its laws "unconstitutional" and its taxes oppressive counties, it is no wonder there should matter of wonder the trouble is no more general and serious, especially more general and serious, especially when we reflect in addition, that these lawless and rebellious teachings are disseminated also from the stump by men of wealth, ability and reputation like "Gov." Ben. Smith, of Kanawha. These are the agencies that have created and kept alive the spirit of resistance in some of the border counties which the Governor has falt called upon to take notice of. If this state of things deters anybody from settling in West Virginia, let the blame fall where it belongs.

But the lawlessness that exists in particular localities, whether it be more or less, or snything the Governor has of the service for the clerky who opened the sessions with prayer, were adopted. The Senate went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Chapline (and subsequently Mr. Martin) in the chair, when a variety of resolutions of a humorous character were offered and discussed, affording great amusefinat and creating repursous applause.

The senate went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Chapline (and subsequently Mr. Martin) in the chair, when the Senate took a recess until 10 o'clock, to allow the enrolling clerks and committee on enrolled bills to complete their work.

or less, or snything the Governor has ceive, with the dearth of immigration which the State experiences. It is not that which drives our young men from all quarters of the State to the far west. or which repels the population that is always flowing from the over peopled cities and States of the East and the crowded countries of Europe, towards the same land of promise.

There must be other causes and deeper ones that operate to our prejudice. There are influences more potent than any, merely ephemeral excitements, which repulse the tide that flows stendly pas us. The same reason that impels the energetic young men of the State to seek homes and farms in Missouri and Kansas, deters the young Vermont farmer from seeking a home and a farm in West Virginia. The remedy in one case is the remedy in the other. To determine with the real evil is and to apply the remedy wisely and effectively is a matter worthy the attention of thoughtful men in the Legislature and out of it.

A WASHINGTON letter to the Providence Journal says: There is a strong feeling against Judge Woodward for his revolutionary speech in the House. One of his colleagues asked him privately why be took, the oath and drew his pay, if he regarded Congress as an unconstitutional body. He replied that There are influences more potent than

Mr. Hervey commended the spirit, manner and tone, of the gentleman from Wood, and thought the Legislature should not instruct Senators and Representatives in Congress, in order to influence great national questions. He said the gentleman from Wood whistled out of the other side of his mouth at the beginning of the session.

Mr. Ferguson, interrupting, asked the gentleman from Brooke if he did not know the difference between instructing Senators and Representatives to vote for a proposition before Congress and one not before Congress. to vote for a proposition before Con-gress and one not before Congress. Mr. Chambers hoped the gentleman would withdraw his demand. If he did not he would accuse him of cowardice.

Mr. Hervey declined to withdraw his demand, and it was not sustained.

Mr. Steere said he did not want the previous question on this subject. The gentleman proposes to do away with the reconstruction laws. The interests of the Union do not depend upon the adoption of the resolution, but upon the perpetuity of the laws which have been enacted.
